No. 34, Main St., Lija, winner of a Din l-Art Helwa Diploma for Restoration and Conservation in 2019.

While the COVID-19 pandemic has ground to a halt many people's lives, the restoration and rehabilitation projects of heritage sites and their immediate environment have continued at "an increased pace", according to Din l-Art Helwa.

It is within this context that the NGO, founded in 1965, has launched its annual competition for the 15th edition of its prestigious Architectural Heritage Awards, taking place later this year.

"It is hoped that this will bring added motivation to all those working to enhance the rich architectural heritage of the Maltese islands at this difficult time," president Simone Mizzi said.

The awards are an initiative set up by the organisation to encourage architectural excellence in a Maltese context, the rehabilitation and reuse of old buildings and the recognition of the dedicated work of those active in the field of restoration.

The programme is carried out each year with the support of the Kamra tal-Periti.

Eligible projects include the restoration or conservation of buildings, the adaptation of buildings to new uses, building additions or alterations, or new building projects in conservation areas.

"Submissions should be for projects completed in the last year up to October 1"

Projects can relate either to a single building, a complex of buildings or to a historic urban environment or townscape. Submissions will be judged on the quality of the work executed, the historic, cultural, educational and social relevance, the preliminary research conducted and the aesthetic and visual merit.

The project may be on a scale ranging from small to large and should display a standard of work which would be outstanding in a Maltese context.
